

Noopur S. Raje, MD

Dr. Raje completed her medical degree at B.J. Medical College of Pune University in India. Her primary focus is treating patients with multiple myeloma and related plasma cell disorders. Dr. Raje leads a dedicated team engaged in clinical trials aimed at developing new promising therapies for multiple myeloma. Her research efforts include understanding bone disease biology and translating these findings for the development of novel bone therapeutics.

Dr. Raje is Director of the Center for Multiple Myeloma and the Rita Kelley Chair in Oncology at the Massachusetts General Hospital Cancer Center and a Professor of Medicine at Harvard Medical School in Boston, Massachusetts.